Their Quarrel

Imogene came down the street with a stalking step and her chin high. She herself might have added that fire flashed from her eyes, but allowance must be made for Imogene's active imagination.

If one had transferred his gaze to the other end of the block one would have seen Imogene's duplicate stalking in the opposite direction just as haughtily. The duplicate was Jane. A few moments previously all negotiations between the two had been broken off abruptly by Imogene's hurling to the ground the doll dress which was the subject of dispute and announcing that she hated Jane and never—no, not if she lived thousands and millions and trillions of years—would she so far forget herself as to speak to Jane again. So there!

Jane had glared. Then with shrill haste she had declared that, so far as she was concerned, she'd never speak to Imogene first if Imogene was the very last girl left on earth and never—no, never—would she come within miles of her hated presence if she could avoid it. After which began their progress down the street.

Wrath still darkened Imogene's brow as she sat down at the luncheon table.

"Don't you feel well?" inquired her mother in surprise.

Imogene regarded her mother in portentous silence. "Jane and I have quarreled," she said at last.

"Oh!" said Imogene's mother in relief. "I'm glad you're not coming down with anything. I don't see why you and Jane can't play without always having a fuss."

"Fuss!" repeated Imogene, indignantly and coldly. "This isn't a fuss—it's a real quarrel, and I hate her and we're never going to be friends any more."

"I don't want you to talk that way," reproved Imogene's mother, with utter disregard of the seriousness of the occasion. "Don't put so much sugar on your berries!"

Imogene pushed the berries away. "I don't want 'em," she said. "I guess you don't understand. It isn't just a common, make up quarrel. I ain't ever going to speak first and she ain't—"

"Isn't," corrected Imogene's mother. "Well, she ain't—isn't," resumed Imogene impatiently. "So, you see, we won't ever speak again nor be friends. We've been mad before, but not like this."

"You and Jane are eternally quarreling for the last time," said Imogene's mother easily. "I guess it isn't as bad as you make out. It isn't nice of either of you to act so."

Imogene set her lips. "We'll never play together again," she declared. "I can't like her any more when she's so mean and selfish. Why, she—"

"That'll do!" said her mother. "I've no doubt that Jane thinks you're the selfish one. I'd be ashamed."

"I used to like Jane," went on Imogene in a reminiscent vein. "I thought she was real nice. That was before she got so mean."

"What are you going to do this afternoon if you don't play with Jane?" inquired her mother.

"Dunno," grumbled Imogene. "I don't care if there isn't any one else in the world to play with but Jane, I wouldn't play with her! She never could be nice enough to me to get me to speak to her. Besides, I won't speak first and she won't."

"I guess I can play without her," resumed Imogene after a pause. "I guess she ain't—the only girl in the world. I can play by myself. P—"

"Ya-le-oo!" cut the air. The call came from the street.

"Ya-le-oo!" Imogene called back mechanically, turning toward the open window.

Imogene's mother for once did not reprove this breach of good manners. She seemed to have trouble controlling the corners of her mouth.

"Coming out!" pursued the outside voice.

"Uh-huh!" called Imogene abruptly from the table. "Did you bring your doll, Jane?"

Imogene turned on her mother as she departed. "Whatcha laughing for?" she demanded. "I guess we didn't either of us speak first. We just spoke out."
